

Most high school seniors plan on achieving their dream job through the traditional method that students have been doing for years. They expect to graduate from high school and then continue their education at a college. They then plan to earn a degree in a field that is related to a career that they would like to work in. When graduating from college they fully expect to find the dream job that they have been waiting for. Instead, today's graduates are thrown into a tough job market. Add that with their lack of experience and most college graduates end up working at a job that has nothing to do with their degree. And on top of that they have also accumulated a mountain of debt and will be paying off their student loans for quite some time. This traditional path did not seem like the right path for me.

The path that I have chosen to achieve my dream career is definitely not the traditional path. Many different factors have led me to consider the military as an option. I have finally settled on the Air Force as the branch of the military that I would like to go into and plan on enlisting in the Air Force early this summer. I decided that the Air Force best fit my path for obtaining my dream career because it can help me in several ways.

The first way that the Air Force will help me is financially. The Air Force offers some tremendous financial opportunities. Once entering the Air Force I will receive a decent sized starting salary. Also room and board will be provided free of charge and food is provided free of charge. Plus health and dental insurance is covered by the Air Force. So while my income is good my expenses will be kept at a minimum. This surplus of money will allow for me to put most of my paycheck into savings (possibly in my Meijer Credit Union account).

The other huge financial benefit of the Air Force is their tuition assistance program. While undergoing training for the Air Force I will receive college credit. Once I am assigned to my job I will be able to continue my education by taking classes at a nearby college when I am off-duty. And the best part of all this is that the Air Force pays for 100% of my tuition. A normal four year degree will take me about six to seven years in the Air Force. So for a couple years longer and a whole lot cheaper I will be able to obtain a Bachelor's Degree in Political Science.

So when I leave the Air Force I will have no debt but instead will have saved up a decent amount of money. I will leave the service with a Bachelor's Degree in Political Science and will be able to put military experience on my resume. This combination will help me achieve my dream career.

My dream career is to go into politics. I would like to become a politician and someday become a political advisor. The Air Force will help me become a politician. The first way that it will help me become a politician is through the education that I received for free because I was in the Air Force. My Bachelor's in Political Science will help me immensely to become a politician. A degree in Political Science will teach me many different things. First, it will teach me a lot about the history of our government, the form of our government, and how our government works. Second, it will teach me how to govern effectively. Third, it will teach me how to run a successful campaign. And finally it will teach me how to defend and articulate my political beliefs. All of these will be important in me obtaining my dream career.

With my degree in political science I will be able to be a smart politician with a reasonable shot at becoming a lawmaker. That degree will help me run a successful campaign and the money that I will have saved up will also help me run a successful campaign. My military experience will be useful in two different ways. The first way is that it will allow me to become a better lawmaker. It will give me the leadership skills to lead my constituents. It will also give me more insight into the military and I will be able to make better decisions regarding military policies. The second way that the Air Force will help me obtain my dream career is in the election process. Military experience will help my chances of being elected because the electorate usually likes military service when voting for a candidate.

In conclusion, I plan on entering the Air Force because of the financial benefits and the experience that I will gain. Both of these will help me obtain my dream career of being a lawmaker and being involved in politics. This is not the traditional path but college is very expensive and the job market is bad. I believe that the Air Force best suits me for achieving my dream career of becoming a politician.
